SYNOPSIS

We need to find a new vocabulary of architecture for tropical climate (e.g. to use natural energies such as wind & sunshine) to move towards sustainable architecture. We need to pursue use of environmental-friendly materials & rapid growing material like bamboo, and to combine architecture and greenery- the anchor of our people in the tropics. This reduces CO2 and promotes awareness humans are just a member of our Earth's ecological system.

In our practice, we try to fulfill all of them. For instance, bamboo structures in Nature with minimum impact; or houses with abundant greenery situated in the middle of the city. Now is the time to get out of the western-centric modern architecture and look into the sustainable architecture principle of the 21st century.

SPEAKER PROFILE

Vo Trong Nghia General Director

Vo Trong Nghia studied architecture as a student on a Japanese Government's Scholarship.

After graduation from Tokyo University and Nagoya Institute of Technology, Vo returned to Vietnam and created an energy-saving architectural style through using environmentally – friendly materials and architectural design.

Vo's works received high appraisals in Vietnam & overseas, and honorable prizes include International Architecture Award (IAA) and Architectural Review Award (AR). Seminal works include wNw Café (2006), wNw Bar (2008) and Bamboo wing (2009). In 2006, Vo started his own architectural firm, Votrongnghia Co., Ltd in Vietnam. Alongside his practice, Nghia has been invited to lecture in several foreign countries such as China, Japan and Sri Lanka.
