

Paint: What Lies Beneath the Surface (and the Lies You Might Have Been Told!)

Efflorescence, blistering, peeling, chalking – these are words no architect wants to hear from a client on completion of a project. And yet, they are common problems that recur over and over again in Singapore. The good news is, most of them are preventable with proper preparation and application techniques.

Find out more about paint defects and prevention at this compelling talk. It will:

- explain why problems are often the result of poor preparation rather than poor paint quality
- equip you with up-to-date knowledge to speak authoritatively to your contractors and clients
- demonstrate the importance of prevention over cure, with tips for ensuring proper surface preparation
- set out clear guidelines for choosing the ideal painting system and products for the job
- recommend remedial measures to apply when problems do occur despite all precautions having been taken

In addition to this enlightening talk, there will be a Q&A session with Miss Lynn Lee, Nippon Paint Product Specialist with over 22 years of experience in the construction and paints industries in the government and private sectors, light refreshments and an informal networking session with fellow architects and building industry professionals.

Lynn Lee
Senior Manager and Product Specialist,
Specifier Relations, Nippon Paint

Lynn joined Nippon Paint Singapore in 1988 and leads the Specifier Relations (Architects and Interior Designers) Division as its Senior Manager and Product Specialist. She has over 30 years of experience in the construction and paints industries in the government and private sectors. She was tasked to set up the Specifier Relations Division, leveraging on skills among multiple departments to strengthen relationships between Nippon Paint Singapore and its partners.

While she continues to chart the strategy and direction of the Division in areas such as business development and new product development, Lynn is equally passionate in sharing her expertise by identifying and training industry talent. She mentors her team and is an approved trainer for the Building and Construction Authority (BCA). In addition, she is a major contributor for BCA's book on good industry practices in painting, and has authored a book on the same topic.

Prior to working in Nippon Paint, Lynn's has previously worked with the Housing and Development Board and a building contractor.

Lynn remains a sought-after visionary fore-runner on the industry trends and developments of the painting industry today.
