Abstract

Upon the invitation by the SIA and the NUS School of Architecture, the speaker, who was the first lecturer in Architecture at the Singapore Polytechnic School of Building & Architecture, will recount his experiences in pioneering education and the initial training of the first batch of home-grown professionals, against the background of the new emergent Singapore. He was also the third President of the SIA and had helped to establish its mission, and also in the publication of the journals "Rumah" and "SIAJ". His subsequent involvements with the CAA as the Chairman of its Board of Architectural Education, and as one of the founders of Arcasia augment his views on architectural development in the global perspective, also based on his own formative years at the University of Manchester and at MIT, and later as Visiting Professor at Manchester, and as Quatercentenary Visiting Fellow Emmanuel College Cambridge. Arising from his own professional practice, he is a Gold Medalist of the PAM, and a life fellow of the SIA.
