

Justice Byrne in “The Future of Litigation of Construction Dispute” said “It is inevitable that the commercial activities of those engaged in the construction industry will always produce disputes.”

Is it inevitable? Is there a culture of “Us vs Them” in today’s construction industry? Are conflicts the result of opposite motivations and if so, does every conflict have to result in a dispute? We can mitigate the escalation of conflicts into dispute through conflict management rather than dispute resolution. Building trust within the construction industry can minimise conflicts from arising. What happened to yesterday’s culture of gentlemen’s agreement and handshake.

These are some of the issues that will be discussed at the seminar with the aim to re-establish trust, building a healthy relationship through pro-active conflict management and dispute avoidance.
