

TOPIC

A practical approach for architects, developers & contractors to meet new obligations and avoid the pitfalls under the DfS Regulations.

SYNOPSIS

The Workplace Safety and Health (Design for Safety) Regulations 2015 were gazetted on 10th July 2015 and come into operation on 1 August 2016. The Regulations impose duties on "designers", defined as "the person who prepares a design plan relating to a structure [which includes buildings]" - i.e. including architects. The principal duty of a designer is to, "as far as it is reasonably practicable, prepare a design plan for the structure that eliminates all foreseeable design risks." This a serious and daunting obligation. Similarly, the regulations impose duties on "developers" and "contractors".

This course session examines the design-for-safety scheme under the Regulations, and focuses on how designers, developers and contractors can go about meeting their design obligations and avoid pitfalls.

TRAINER

Darren Bengier is a Council member of SIA, and Chairperson of the SIA WSH Committee. He was delegated the task to represent SIA in the DfS Regulations Taskforce (as formed by WSH Council). Aside from the main taskforce assembly, Darren sits on two of the taskforce's work groups: (i) the legislation drafting group, and (ii) the competency and capability group. This involvement is on the back of representing SIA in the WSH Council's WSH (Construction & Landscaping) Committee and its DfS Sub-committee in which Darren actively participated in implementation and review of the 'Guidelines on Design for Safety in Buildings and Structures'. Darren is also a Trainer for the DfS Professional course. He thus has insights into the purposes and intents of the DfS Regulations, and will endeavour to share with his fellow architects his thoughts on the background, pitfalls and good practice approaches to DfS under the new Regulations.
